7 MHz Band

Those of you who do not already know will be interested to hear that the Office of Communications in the UK, Ofcom, on the 23rd of September issued a notice of a proposed change in the Schedule to amateur licences. The notice is addressed to all holders of amateur licences and indicates that it is proposed to extend the current 7

MHz band from 100 kHz to 200 kHz that is from 7.0 to 7.2 MHz. The portion between 7.1 and 7.2 MHz will be on a secondary basis and no interference may be caused to other services using this segment. The notice allows all amateurs to make representations about the proposed change up to the 23rd of October.

This is a welcome move as it anticipates the exclusive allocation to amateurs in Regions 1 and 3 of the ITU of 200 kHz from 7.0 MHz with effect from April 2009 as decided at WRC03. The IRTS raised this issue with COMREG at its meeting in February last and has had further recent contact on the matter. It is hoped that a similar arrangement will be introduced here in the not too distant future.
